Easy Read Guide to England's Smaller Political Parties

People have different ideas about how the country should be run.

A political party is a group of people who share similar ideas about how the country should be run.

Political parties want to be in government so they can turn their ideas into law.

The government is a group of people who have the power make laws and set rules for the country.

England has three main political parties.

It also has several smaller political parties which this guide will cover.

They are:

- the Co-operative Party
- the Green Party
- the Reclaim Party
- Reform UK

Some political parties are described as being either left-wing or right-wing.

Some political parties are also described as being in the centre.

Left-wing political parties believe in equality.

This means that they want all people to be given equal chances and have more support from the government.

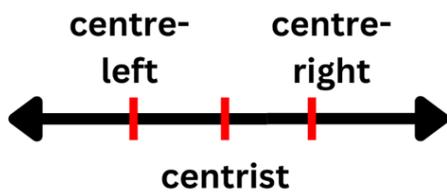

Right-wing political parties believe in tradition.

This means that they want people to make their own decisions about their lives and for the government to be smaller.

Political parties in the centre support a balance between left-wing and right-wing ideas.

This means they want equality and also want people to make their own decisions about their own lives.

Most of England's political parties are based in the centre, but each lean in different directions.

These positions are called centre-left, centre-right, and centrist.

The Co-operative Party is centre-left.

They are also called "the Co-Op Party" for short.

They want more people to form more co-operatives where members co-operate to help each other.

A co-operative is a type of organisation that makes the lives of its members easier.

It could be something like a bank, a business, a factory, or a farm.

The Green Party is left-wing.

They are also called “the Greens” for short.

They believe protecting the environment should be the government’s top priority.

This means they want to preserve and protect nature from damage.

The Reclaim Party is right-wing.

They want stronger laws to protect free speech and more power for the police to punish criminals

Free speech is a person’s right to say what they think without being stopped or punished.

Reform UK is right-wing.

They used to be called “the Brexit Party.”

They want to change the voting system in general elections so more smaller parties can get elected.

They also want to stop illegal immigration into England and the United Kingdom.

This means they want to stop people coming from other countries who don't have permission.

Most of these political parties have Members of Parliament from all over England.

A Member of Parliament is also called an MP. An MP is elected to speak for people living in their area in Parliament.

Parliament is where the United Kingdom's laws are made.

A general election is when the people of the country vote for the next government.

General elections usually happen every 5 years.

Every part of the United Kingdom, including England, votes in a general election.

The party with the most MPs after a general election forms the government.

The Conservative Party have the most MPs and are the party in government.

Their leader is Rishi Sunak and he is the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister is in charge of the government.

The Labour Party has the second-most MPs and is the Official Opposition.

This means they challenge the government and make it explain its decisions. At the next general election, they want to replace the government.

Their leader is Sir Keir Starmer and he is the Leader of the Opposition.

The Greens and the Reclaim Party are also part of the Official Opposition.

The Co-Op Party works closely with the Labour Party and they share many policies.

They usually stand together in elections and its MPs are part of the Official Opposition.

Reform UK currently do not have any MPs elected to Parliament.
